Congress could announce a $1.4 trillion spending deal as soon as Monday that would avoid a government shutdown ahead of Friday's midnight deadline, three sources told Politico. The legislative text is reportedly expected Tuesday. One GOP aide told Politico that debate remains open on just a "few small items," but otherwise a compromise looks like it's in place. Politico notes the Spending on stuff we don't need is the ultimate thief of joy, but all too often those purchases happen when we're in a specific emotional state, making it extra tricky to reign it in. Stress, anxiety, comparison, low self-esteem or even plain old boredom—all of these states put us at risk of handing over hard earned cash for a quick fix of dopamine that doesn't last.
